Chapter 1 by Molly Eaton

_She opened up the neatly wrapped box. A soft gasp escaped from her lips. Gently lifting a silver heart-shaped locket, it gleamed and shimmered in the light. Little, happy tear drops fell softly from her eyes. Glancing up at her friend, she realized her sister in all but blood bit her lip anxiously awaiting her best friend's reaction.

"Oh, Faye, I love it," she thanked tearfully. "It is so beautiful! Where did you ever think of such an idea?"

"It just came to me one day," Faye answered softly. "I am so glad you like it. Read the inscription on it."

"There's an inscrip- oh," she said quietly. "Sœurs toujours...Wow. I don't know what else to say. Thank you so much."

"We're sisters, aren't we?."

"Oh, come here, Faye!" she cried and immediately drew her best friend into a tight embrace._

She jolted awake to the alarm clock sounding. Sighing, she fell back onto her bed. That dream was one she had not experienced in ages. Each time, though, it was the same. The same events happened. That girl, Faye, always appeared and gave her the locket. Ever since she was a young girl, she would dream her older self getting such a beautiful necklace. Now that she was sixteen, she now saw herself perfectly fit.

A knock sounded on the door. "Faye, wake up! It's almost time to go to school!"

Groaning, she got up from her bed. A hard banging on her door. "WAKE UP! It's almost time to go!"

"Mom! I'm up, okay?" She yelled back.

Opening up her dresser, I pulled out my quarter sleeve plaid shirt and some nice jeans. Walking into the bathroom, I noticed while washing my face that there was something on my hand that wasn't there last night.
